Detailed Action

1. Claims 5, 6, 7 and 8 are objected to under 37 CFR 1.75(c) as being in improper form because a multiple dependent claim should refer to other claims in the alternative only. See MPEP § 608.01(n). Accordingly, claims 6-8 have not been further treated on the merits. Claim 6 is objected to because claim 6 depends upon claim 5.

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1-6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Applicant's Admitted Prior Art (APA) in view of Goodman, Danny, "Danny Goodman's JavaScript Handbook" IDG Books Worldwide, 1996, pages 32-35.

As per independent claim 1:

APA discloses the invention substantially as claimed: APA teaches a method for executing an RPC (Remote Procedure Call) over HTTP from a Web page within the application window at a client device, the method comprising:

 containing, in the application window of a client device, at least one Web page [see discussion of NetGratus Remote Scripting, page 8 of instant specification]; > transmitting, to a server, an HTTP request initiated by a first HTML element [see discussion of NetGratus Remote Scripting, page 8 of instant specification];

09/916,253 Art Unit: 2126

 invoking, at a server, a procedure or a set of program code identified by the URL of said first HTML element [see discussion of NetGratus Remote Scripting, page 8 of instant specification];

However, APA does not explicitly teach receiving, at the Web browser from the server in the transmitting action, output of the procedure or program code in the invoking action into a second HTML <script> element. APA does teach that the client-side proxy uses <iframe> for Microsoft Internet Explorer browsers and <layer> for Netscape browsers as the vehicle to transport the data [see discussion of NetGratus Remote Scripting, page 8 of instant specification].

Goodman teaches the well known use of the <script> tag to mark sections of executable code [e.g., see "<SCRIPT> tag" discussion pages 32-35.

It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to improve upon the system taught by APA by using the <script> tag (instead of <iframe>) because it would provide APA's system with the enhanced capability of using client-side JavaScript code to process the data returned from the server after the remote procedure is executed.

As per dependent claim 2:

APA teaches the application window is a Web browser window [see discussion of NetGratus Remote Scripting, page 8 of instant specification].

Application/Control Number:

09/916,253 Art Unit: 2126

As per dependent claim 3:

APA teaches the first HTML element in the transmitting action and the second HTML element in the receiving action are contained within the same Web page [see discussion of NetGratus Remote Scripting, page 8 of instant specification - APA does teach that the client-side proxy uses <iframe> for Microsoft Internet Explorer browsers and <layer> for Netscape browsers as the vehicle to transport the data].

As per dependent claim 4:

APA teaches the first HTML element in the transmitting action and the second HTML element in the receiving action are contained within different Web pages [see discussion of NetGratus Remote Scripting, page 8 of instant specification].

As per dependent claim 5:

APA, as modified by Goodman, teaches the first HTML element in the transmitting action is an HTML <script> element [see discussion of NetGratus Remote Scripting, page 8 of instant specification; see Goodman disclosure of the <script> element pages 32-35].

As per dependent claim 6:

APA, as modified by Goodman, teaches the first HTML element in the transmitting action is the same as the second HTML element in the receiving action. [APA teaches that the client-side proxy uses <iframe> for Microsoft Internet Explorer browsers and <layer> for Netscape browsers as the vehicle to transport the data; Goodman teaches the use of the <script> element, as discussed above in the rejection of claim 1].

Art Unit: 2126

3. Claims 7 and 8 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. § 103(a) as being unpatentable over Applicant's Admitted Prior Art (APA) in view of Goodman, Danny, "Danny Goodman's JavaScript Handbook" IDG Books Worldwide, 1996, pages 32-35, and further in view of well known prior art.

As per dependent claims 7 & 8:

APA, as modified by Goodman, discloses the invention substantially as claimed, as discussed above in the rejections of claims 1-6.

However, APA & Goodman do not explicitly teach the use of the and <embed> HTML elements.

"Official Notice" is taken that the selection of a particular HTML element or "tag" (such as or <embed>) is a design choice well known to those of ordinary skill in the art, and such choice is ordinarily motivated so as to accommodate the particular requirements of an end user, such as using the tag to embed an image in a web page, or using the <embed> tag to add sound to a web page. Accordingly, the claimed arrangement does not constitute a limitation that is patentably distinct from well known practices in the art [MPEP 2144.03].

4. Prior Art not relied upon:

Please refer to the references listed on the attached PTO-892 which are not relied upon in the claim rejections detailed above.
